

What drew your organization to support the AIA|LA Breakfast Series, and what does this partnership represent for you within the broader conversation about Los Angeles' built environment and civic leadership?

We were drawn to the Breakfast Series because it fosters meaningful dialogue across design, policy, and civic leadership. Through Graphisoft's BIM solutions for the AEC industry, we support more informed, collaborative decision-making, and this partnership reflects our commitment to advancing a more connected and forward-thinking built environment in Los Angeles.

From your perspective, what are the most urgent challenges—and opportunities—facing the city today where design, policy, and industry leadership must work more closely together?

Los Angeles is navigating urgent challenges around housing affordability, climate resilience, and equitable growth. These issues require stronger alignment across disciplines, and Graphisoft's Open BIM approach helps enable that collaboration—giving teams the tools to coordinate more effectively, reduce risk, and deliver more sustainable, community-centered outcomes.

How does your firm's work today reflect the kinds of values, priorities, or long-term commitments that this Breakfast Series is bringing into focus for the profession and the city?

Graphisoft's vision is to build a better tomorrow imagined by great design teams and brought to life with our innovative solutions. Our work is grounded in enabling architects to design with greater insight, efficiency, and impact. Through Graphisoft's BIM solutions, we support sustainability, adaptability, and long-term value creation—priorities that closely align with the Breakfast Series' focus on shaping a more resilient and inclusive future for the city.