

AIA|LA Announces the 2026 Board of Directors Award Recipients

Annual Honors Celebrate Leadership, Service, and Lasting Contributions to Architecture and the Communities of Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES, CA — The American Institute of Architects Los Angeles (AIA|LA) is proud to announce the recipients of its 2026 Board of Directors Awards, recognizing individuals and organizations whose leadership, service, advocacy, and commitment to the public have strengthened both the architectural profession and the communities it serves.

Presented annually by the AIA|LA Board of Directors, these prestigious honors celebrate those whose contributions extend beyond the design of buildings, advancing architecture as a catalyst for civic engagement, cultural enrichment, and positive social impact.

Leading this year's honorees are Annie Chu, FAIA, and Rick Gooding, AIA, recipients of the 2026 AIA|LA Gold Medal, the Chapter's highest honor.

“For more than thirty years, Annie Chu and Rick Gooding have made a lasting contribution to the cultural life of Los Angeles. Their work is distinguished by its intelligence, restraint, and enduring relevance. Through projects that serve the public and strengthen important institutions, they have shown how architecture can quietly but profoundly enrich our city,” says Toni Lewis, AIA, 2026 President, AIA Los Angeles.

Among this year's honorees is the inaugural Community Contribution Award, presented jointly for the first time by AIA|LA and Architecture for Communities Los Angeles (ACLA). Established to recognize individuals, organizations, or firms whose work demonstrates the transformative power of architecture in service to communities, the inaugural award honors Jodie Mendelson, AIA, Jessica Orlando, AIA, and the AIA Pasadena & Foothill Chapter for creating the Ask an Architect initiative following the devastating Altadena wildfires. Their leadership mobilized volunteer architects to provide guidance, expertise, and hope to homeowners navigating the complex process of recovery and rebuilding.

The recipients will be formally honored during the 2026 AIA|LA Design Awards Ceremony on October 27, 2026, where the Board of Directors Awards will be presented alongside the celebrated AIA|LA Design Awards and Next LA Awards, recognizing excellence in architecture, emerging talent, and professional leadership.
